Course Overview: This course will provide an overview of cognitive behavior therapy (CBT) and adult psychological disorders that respond well to CBT. Theories concerning etiology of those disorders, rationale of CBT and various skills of cognitive behavioral treatments will be covered in this course. Students will have a semester long self behavior modification project where they can apply theory and skill of CBT to their own behavior change. The bio-psycho-social model and cross-cultural approaches will be emphasized throughout the course.

Course Objectives:
1. Learning the nature, prevalence, etiology, and treatment rationale for psychological disorders that respond well to CBT.
2. Understanding current theoretical models of abnormal behavior and its CBT 3. Becoming aware of current controversies and issues regarding evidence based treatment (EBT) and roles of CBT 4. Learning hands-on skills of CBT and achieving competence for clinical work.
5. Understanding bio-psycho-social basis and cultural foundations of abnormal behavior and its treatment.

Course Structure: A major part of this course will be in-class discussion, skills training and student presentations as well as lecture of the instructor. Therefore, students’ active participation in discussions, presentations, and other class activities are essential. Don’t be discouraged if you tend to be quiet. This class might be the opportunity for you to change yourself. Students are required to carry out a semester long behavior modification project where you can apply skills and theories of CBT to change your own behavior. Your behavior modification project can be “becoming more active in class”!
Students are expected to read the assigned chapters every week, and the exam questions will be drawn from textbooks, presentations, classroom discussions as well as lecture. Students are expected to attend all the classes and arrive on time. Your grade will be determined based on class attendance and participation, two in-class exams, two short presentations on behavior modification project, and an individual presentation.

Behavior Modification Project: Students are required to carry out a semester long self behavior modification project where students can apply theories and skills of CBT to change their own behavior. Details of the project will be discussed in the first class.

Behavior Modification Presentations: Students will have two short presentations about their behavior modification project: one at the planning stage and another as a report of results. Each presentation will last about 20 minutes. The first presentation in the planning stage should have well defined goals, strategies, assessment and monitoring methods, analysis of problem behavior, and a good definition of success of the project. The second presentation should include plans, process, monitoring and assessment results, all the related tables and graphs, outcome, troubleshooting process, discussion and references. More details of the presentation will be discussed in class.

Exam: There will be one in-class examinations administered. No make-up exams will be administered. The exams will be composed of short answers, essays and possibly a few multiple choice questions. More details will be announced in class.

Class Presentation: Each student will present to the class on one of the CBT or ACT methods introduced in the texts. Presentations should be more of a workshop style rather than a lecture. It should include the following components: (a) review of the CBT package or ACT method (b) how and why different groups (e.g. in countries other than the U.S., women, elderly, low income group, ethnic minorities in the U.S., etc.) might respond to the treatment differently, (c) real life examples of the treatment such as case vignettes, role plays or video clips, (d) leading role plays engaging the whole class as a practice of the therapy method presented. Presentations will be about 90 minute long including the time when the presenter will lead the about 30 minute long in-class discussion and role play practice. Additional guidelines will be discussed in class.
